Going on a pilgrimage is an old Christian tradition, and early Christians frequently went to the holy places in Jerusalem. Over the years this path became known as the "Via Dolorosa," or the "Sorrowful Way." The Franciscans took this practice from Jerusalem to the churches of Italy, erecting stations in churches and at other sites. The practice spread throughout Europe and the rest of the world.

"Walking and praying the Stations of the Cross is an ancient way of participating in Jesus' suffering in the last days before his death. The concept of pilgrimage is re-ignited with creative visuals that interpret the historical events of the suffering of Christ in terms of their significance for our present-day walk of faith. And, as pilgrimage does, transformation is brought about in unexpected ways." (Mary Beth Franklyn)
